

IOWA STATE UNIVERSITY

Preparing, promoting Iowa's effective educators

Iowa State University alum and family and consumer sciences teacher Andrew Lee Mogle of Norwalk was recently named the 2008 Iowa Teacher of the Year.

The Iowa Teacher of the Year award is sponsored by the Iowa Department of Education through an appropriation from the Iowa legislature. School administrators of the year are selected by the School Administrators of Iowa. The T.E. Davidson Award of Excellence is bestowed by the Iowa Association of School Boards.

The Iowa State University Teacher Education Program and College of Human Sciences are proud to honor Iowa's outstanding educators.

Over its 150-year history, Iowa State University has graduated more than 20,000 teachers — educators who have helped half a million children reach their full potential.

Our teachers help Iowa expand its potential — one child at a time.
